Sharon assures Golan settlers: We'll stay

KATZRIN (Itim). — Israel will not leave the Golan Heights, even within the framework of a peace agreement with Syria, Agriculture Minister Ariel Sharon declared yesterday at a meeting of Golan Heights settlers

Sharon, who also announced that two new settlements would be established on the Golan (one between Har Edom and El Rom, and the other near the Syrian-Jordanian-Israel border) in addition to three announced earlier, said he was speaking in the name of the prime minister and the entire cabinet in declaring Israel's commitment to stay on the Golan.

He said three factors had to be taken into account here: the limited area of the heights still in Israel's possession, the fact that a third of larael's water resources came from the Golan, and the drastic changes that have come about in the northern sector with Syria's new role in Sharon had no patience for the settlers' harsh comments on Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan following his earlier reported statements on the Golan this week. "I didn't come here to listen to your advice on the structure of the cabinet," Sharon retorted when they suggested that the time had come for the government to choose between "the State of Israel without Moshe Dayan, or Moshe Dayan without the State of Israel."

On other points raised by the settlers, Sharon said Katzrin would have preference as regards building homes, and he had Housing Minister David Levy's word on this. He also said the government would soon make it possible for any Druse on the Golan who wished it to take israel citizenship.

Israel rejects UN blame for S. Lebanon tension

yesterday rejected UN charges that Israel was fomenting disorder in Southern Lebanon by impeding the deployment of Lebanese army units in the area.

In a letter sent yesterday to UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim. Begin wrote that U.S. Ambassador Samuel Lewis had been informed of the government's "unreserved agreement to the deployment of the Lébanese battalion in accordance with the plan which the ambassador had presented to us. We made it clear that the security zone under the control of Major Haddad and his compatriots will in no way be impaired." Begin wrote.

Begin went on to deny Waldheim's assertion that Israel was supporting threats of violence both to the Lebanese army and to UNIFIL" by Major Sa'ad Haddad, commander of the South Lebanon Christian forces. "I wish to make it absolutely clear, that while we do exercise influence, we are not in a position to issue orders to Major Haddad," the prime minister said.

"What Israel has done," the letter continued, "is to save the Christian minority from the threat of physical annihilation at the hands of the Syrian army of occupation and those professional killers, the so-called

Prior to releasing the contents of the letter, Begin conferred with key cabinet ministers. The meeting was classified as a session of the Ministerial Security Committee and a blackout was therefore imposed on its deliberations.

In a clear allusion to Israel Waldhelm had earlier issued a statement lashing out at sources supplying border Christian milities with arms.

"The fact that the de facto militia elements are armed with heavy modern weapons is an intolerable aspect of the situation prevailing in this part of Southern Lebanon and of the problems which UNIFIL has now been facing since June of last year," Waldhelm's statement had said.

Haddad clashes with UN, seals 'Free Lebanon'

Jerusalem Post Staff and Agencies

Major Sa'ad Haddad's Christian militia forces yesterday sealed tight his newly. proclaimed "Free Lebanon" border belt in Southern Lebanon by waging a blitzkrieg assault on UNIFIL troop headquarters. which was helping a Lebanese army battailon deploy in the South.

Reports received at UN information offices in Jerusalem and Beirut said the 35-minute attack had knocked out of action the entire helicopter fleet of the UN Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL), and wrecked hangars. Machinegun fire was reported to have penetrated the quarters of senior officers, as well as a radio room.

Six Irish troops and two Dutch of-ficers were reported wounded in the early morning offensive on the UNIFIL headquarters at Nakura on the Mediterranean. Lebanese authorities in Beirut, meanwhile, said yesterday that they had issued an arrest warrant for Haddad, who on Wednesday declared self-rule in the Christian enclaves adjoining the border with Israel. The authorities said that Haddad would be tried by a military tribunal on Monday for "high treason" for proclaiming his ministate. He is also charged with "collaborating with the enemy." U.S. 'concerned,' indicates Israel should curb Haddad

By WOLF BLITZER
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

WASHINGTON. — The U.S. yesterday warned that the most recent attack by Lebanese Christian militia against UN peace-keeping forces in Southern Lebanon was "properly a matter of extreme concern.

State Department spokesman Hodding Carter added, however, that late reports reaching Washington suggested that a new cease-fire between the UN troops and Major Sa'ad Haddad's Christian forces appeared to be taking hold.

He said the U.S. has 'repeatedly' made its position "very clear" to the governments in Beirut and Jerusalem. Redeployment of troops from the central Lebanese army to the UN-controlled areas in the south remains "a matter of great-importance to the ultimate security and well-being of the country," the spokesman said.

"Anything which hinders that (effort) should be stopped," he continued, declaring that the UN troops tacts, the U.S. has appealed to Israel to use its influence with Haddad to urge him to cooperate with the redeployment of the Lebanese

At a news briefing, spokesman Carter said that Washington has asked "anyone who has influence on the actions of those participating (in the fighting) to use that influence." This was seen here as largely meaning Israel.

He again rejected Haddad's declaration of an autonomous "Free Lebanon' in the South as an 'unacceptable position.' On Wednesday, Carter had reiterated the long-standing U.S. support for the authority of the Beirut government throughout the entire country.

Yesterday, the spokesman once again noted that the Israeli government has come out "formally and openly" in favour of the redeployment of the regular Lebanese soldiers. Clearly, the Americans are expecting Jerusalem to use its influence over Haddad to cooperate with the move. Intensive U.S.-Israeli

Demands to oust Dayan voiced at NRP meeting

By SARAH HONIG Post Political Reporter

HOME NEWS

ELKANA. — Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan was the target of heavy criticism at a meeting yester-day of the National Religious Party executive in this Samaria settlement, with many demands sounded for his dismissal.

Basis for the criticism were the minister's comments last Sunday at Tomer in the Jordan Valley, which were interpreted by some as hinting at readiness to dismantle Jewish settlements on the Golan and/or withdraw from the area. Davan was. however, later quoted as saying that if faced with a choice between peace with Syria and withdrawal from the Golan Heights, he would prefer to forgo the peace.

NRP secretary-general Danny Vermus told yesterday's meeting that with his recent pronouncements, Dayan "has put in doubt his ability to continue and take part in any talks linked to the peace process. The NRP could under no condition agree to the fact that a minister in charge of the foreign affairs portfolio would express opinions contrary to those of the government and Knesset."

The NRP meeting took place in Elkana to express the party's solidarity with settlements beyond the green line, and to stress its vow 'to serve as the vanguard in the struggle for Judea, Samaria and the Gaza Strip." But when the NRP Executive members arrived, they found the gates to the settlement locked, with some of the members hoisting placards reading: "No public relations and public office at our expense." However, the gates were later address the meeting. Most of them took the NRP to task and expressed a sense of betraval.

Vermus called on the prime minister 'to see to it that declarations such as those made by Dayan not be made again by government ministers, as they tend to shake the unity of the camp at the time it is most needed ... This is not the first time Dayan has expressed opinions which do not mesh with the national consensus and thereby causes grave political damage to the country, in whose wake he then tries to clarify his words."

Among the speakers demanding Dayan's ouster was Rabbi Haim Druckman MK, who referred to him as "a dangerous man, in whom I have no faith at all. He should be sacked and the government must unequivocally take issue with his statements.

Interior Minister Yosef Burg also took issue with Dayan, though in less outspoken terms. Burg argued that whoever "says that there is no danger that autonomy might spawn a Palestinian state is either mistaken or misleading. We must be wary of this danger as we enter the autonomy talks, and do all we can to Education Minister Zevulun Hammer urged the settlers and their sympathizers on the party executive not to "lose hope in the NRP and not to seek other political alternatives. He said that the selection of Burg to lead the autonomy negotiating team means government support for the NRP stand on the issue. "Burg will steer things in such a way that we will not forsake our rights in Eretz Tisrael or our settlements."

A senior source in the district attorney's office told The Jerusalem Post that the police wanted to pre-sent the charge sheets as soon as possible, for fear that Asian and his colleagues would try to influence witnesses by violent means.

The witnesses for the prosecution include two women. One is Irls Doshy, who was arrested with Asian on April 7, and the other is Amaila Levin, who was arrested a day later in her Tel Aviv home.

The charge sheet says that Asian was staying in Tel Aviv's Ramada Continental Hotel on April 6 and 7. It alleges that on April 6 all the suspects gathered in Aslan's room and conspired to buy cocaine, and sell it to two people: 10 grammes to a man called "Shabi." and 50 grammes to a man from Jaffa cailed "Ya'aca"."

Aclan alone is charged with going with Irls Dechy to his room in the hotel to short cocalne, an act which is illegal. The prosecution also claims that Asian gave 0.065 grammes of the narcotic to Doshy. In another clause of the charge sheet Asian, Goldstein and Affalo are accused of drug trading. The prosecution charges that on four different occasions during February and March, Asian gave Doshy cocaine while in his first in Kikar Atarim or in Doshy's flat.

Seven km. of books at J'lem fair

By AARON SITTNER Jerusalem Post Reporter

The largest Jerusalem International Book Fair ever staged since the biennial event was inaugurated 18 years ago was officially opened at Binyenei Ha'ooma last night, with Sir Isaiah Berlin being awarded the Jerusalem Prize.

Two temporary structures - in tront of and behind the huge building have had to be erected to accommodate the expanded number of exhibitors from 55 countries all over the world. Fair executive director Gershon Pollock told The Jerusalem Post: "If all the bookstands were lined up in a row, you would have to walk a straight seven kilometres from the first display to the last."

Prime Minister Menahem Begin told the audience at the opening ceremonies: "We, the people of the book, in this city of the Book of Books, welcome the publishers of all the countries which have come to participate in the Ninth Jerusalem International Book Fair. But special greetings go to the representative of a certain country, not a large or rich one.

"I refer to the representative of Uganda, who has joined the fair at the last moment. I salute his country because it has liberated itself from a monstrous dictatorship and bloody tyranny." Begin said.

Begin also said he is "praying that President Sadat will win a big victory in the referendum tomorrow, in which the Egyptian people will vote on the peace treaty." He also ex-pressed his "deep condolences" to the family of the Cairo postal employee who was killed in yesterday's terrorist bomb blast in that Isaiah Berlin's major books in-clude Karl Marx, The Hedgehog and the Fox, Four Essays on Liberty and Concepts, and Categories: Philosophical Essays.

At a press conference earlier in the day, Sir Isaiah described Israel as "the major barrier against assimilation of Jews," and predicted that the distinction between Zionists and non-Zionist Jews would become sharper as time goes on.

The scholar, who reached England at the age of 10 and rose to the top ranks of Oxford's faculty, also noted, "I know of no country in the world without some anti-Semitic sentiment it is even present in countries where there are no Jews.'

The Jerusalem Book Fair opens to the public at 10 a.m. today, and large crowds are expected at Binyenei Ha'coma through next Wednesday evening, when the show closes. One of the highlights this year is a small glass-topped display case housing one of the three copies of the Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty. (The other two copies are in Washington and Cairo.)

Except for publishers of scientific or technical books and those represented by Israeli distributors, all foreign publishing enterprises have been placed according to a geographic floor plan prepared by the fair organizers. As at the last fair, the French group of exhibitors is one of the largest and occupies is one of the largest, and occupies a major section of the northern mezannine pavilion of the building.

Most of the British publishers occupy the temporary wing located between Binyenei Ha'ooma and the Jerusalem Hilton Hotel.

The Oxford University Press marking 500 years of publishing, is showing an exhibit that includes several original copies of its early publications — including a pocket-sized The Jewish Kalendar (for the year 1895) and a folio-sized Biblia Hebraica dated 1750.

Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kollek last night called the city's book fairs "our real success stories," and dis-closed that the burgeoning popularity of the event may compel the organizers to convert it into an annual rather than blennial fair.

operating mechanisms, some 800 electric detonators and more than 150 kg. of various explosives.

Jerusalem District Court Judge Eliahu Noam dismissed the accused's testimony. He said that at least on the last occasion, after Nidam heard of the arrest for suspected terrorist offences of Nur e-Din Ja'abari (son of the former mayor of Hebron). Nidam had known what was in the cases he was amuggling.

"At any rate, a smuggler cannot hide behind the claim that he only smuggled drugs, gold and antiquities. If it subsequently becomes clear that he was smuggling arms, he is regarded as being in possession of them, because he had full control over the cases. From the general experience of life it should have been clear to the accused that there were reasonable grounds to suspect that the cases contained arms, because of their great weight."

The judge also dismissed Nidam's testimony regarding his plan to prepare an "ambush" for the Sharabatis, to extract half the sum they had promised him for planting the bomb and then hand them over to the police. This did not fit in with the accused's behaviour during the entire episode before he was stopped by chance by the police.

District Attorney Michael Kirsch told the court that the law allowed Nidam to be sentenced to up to 10 years for each smuggling run. The fact that he had cooperated with security authorities — a cooperation which Kirsch said was only partial and calculated - had already been taken into account, he argued: Nidam had not been charged for his part in the planned bombing, Had he been charged with this offence, he could have been tried before a military court and sentenced to death or life imprisonment.

"The only way we can express our aversion and rejection of his behaviour, which was motivated only by greed, is to sentence him to a long period of imprisonment," the prosecutor said.

Defence Counsel Zvi Lidsky said that Nidam's cooperation with the investigators should be taken into account, as well as the fact that he endangered himself by receiving and transporting the bomb until it could be safely dismantled.

President Yitzhak Navon also visited the valley, and greeted the crowd in Moroccan Arabic. He referred to the disapproving attitude towards the Mimouna festivities volced by Sephardi Chief Rabbi Ovadia Yosef, and expressed the hope that the rabbi would attend next year's Mimouna in the wake of the tranquillity and deccrum prevailing this year.

Rabbi Yosef has complained that the event had lost its family-oriented and modest character.

Yesterday's festivities were preceded on Wednesday night by traditional home festivities, in which friends, families and neighbours visit each other.

The traditional foods served on this occasion are dairy products and items which are specifically hametz, such as bread or beer, and sweets. In keeping with the tradition of serving sweet foods, those observing the Mimouna are careful not to eat anything containing salt, a symbol of mourning.

Elsewhere in the country celebrations took place in parks and forests. In Acre, thousands gathered in the Napoleon Woods. Some factories were shut down in order to permit workers to attend.

20,000 gather for Iranian New Year

By MICHAL YUDELMAN Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. - Over 20,000 Iranian Jews congregated in the Ramat Gan National Park yesterday to celebrate the Iranian New Year. otherwise known as Rooz-Bag or Garden Day. Like the North African Jews' Mimouna fete, which this year coincided with the Iranian spring festival, it is marked by day-long celebrations out of doors. Families of Iranian Jewish origin from all over the country began streaming into the park at 11 o'clock in the morning and were still arriv-ing in their hundreds by late afternoon. Blankets were spread on the lawns, picnic lunches laid out and barbeque grills set up all around a central stage, on which Iranian dancers, singers and a newly arrived Iranian magician performed. Labour Opposition leader Shimon Peres and Labour MK Yitzhak Rabin addressed the celebrators during the morning.

Sasson Simantov, Chairman of the Coresh organization — the umbrella organization for Iranian Jews in Israel — told The Jerusalem Post that the participants in the festivities represented the 150,000 Israelis of Iranian origin.

Simantov told The Post that having spoken to newly arrived Iranian immigrants, he had learned that the Jewish community in Iran is now relatively calm. The new regime has not interfered with the community's internal affairs and the Jews are hoping to be able to continue their lives undisturbed, Simantov said.

BEIT JANN, — A serious dispute has broken out between residents of this Galilee Druse village and the Nature Reserves Authority over the authority's blocking of a road eading to a nature reserve on Mouni Meron, near Safad.

The 7,000 dunams of mountain-side land were declared a protected area some two years ago, after the authority expressed concern that the Druse's goat herds were doing irreparable damage to foliage and

The Jerusalem Municipal Traffic Department has changed the highway markings at the exit from the city to Tel Aviv and has begun to fill in gaps in the centre highway divider, following an article that appeared in The Jerusalem Post motoring supplement last September and some five months of personal lobbying by staff writer Meir Ronne

The article had pointed out that the incomplete and incorrect road markings led drivers to travel three abreast while competing for the two lanes at the beginning of the Jerusalem-Tel Aviv highway proper. It had also noted that the gaps in the road divider opposite the two petrol stations were being used by drivers to make turns across the four-lane hitch-hikers stopping cars on the Municipal traffic officials did not react to the article until The Post secured the personal intervention of

The article had further pointed out that accidents were being caused by Mayor Teddy Kollek over three months ago. Following repeated telephone conversations with traffic department officials, the highway was finally repainted two weeks ago.

The next morning The Post informed traffic officials that the contractor who demarcated the traffic lanes had perpetuated the same dangerous situation, by creating a third lane ending in a blind alley, with drivers in all three lanes being forced to cross all the white lines as they passed the Givat Shaul turnoff

After ten days of telephone calls and promises of action from three different traffic officials, the faulty markings were blacked out on the eve of Pessah. Jerusalem traffic control is supervised by a joint committee of municipal, police and Transport Ministry representatives. Municipal officials have now promised The Post that they will consult with the police about setting up a special safety area for hitch-bikers below the area now used by hitch-hiking

Sri Lanka refusal gives Israeli cricketers head start

By JACK LEON

Post Sports Reporter TEL AVIV. - Israel will start next month's qualifying competition for the second Prudential World Cricket Cup with two points, following Sri Lanka's refusal last week to play its scheduled match against the Israelia in England on June 4.

The announcement from London that the controversial first-round game was being awarded to Israel by default was made on Tuesday by the chairman of the tournament's organising committee John Gardiner, the BBC reported yesterday. Gardiner described Sri Lanka's decision as "regrettable."

Local Cricket Association chairman Gabriel Kandli told The Jerusalem Post yesterday that "Israel appreciates the prompt ac-tion and fairminded decision taken by the committee. The award of two points will be a great morale-booster to our team, though of course Israel very much regrets Sri Lanka's at-titude towards us."

The 14 associate members of the International Cricket Conference participating in the two-week qualifying tournament in the English midlands, are being divided into three groups. The winner of each group will go into a semi-final round, along with the best runner-up. The two finalists then join the six full ICC members in the competition proper. According to military sources, the American team, headed by an army colonel, will make extensive on-site inspections of Egypt's anti-aircraft defences and prepare an assessment of Egypt's needs for new equipment. Moscow cut off arms supplies to Egypt in 1975.

Military experts here believe that many of those Soviet missiles have deteriorated after years of exposure to desert winds and sand and may no longer be operational. Even if they are, Egypt faces an acute problem in keeping them that way because of the shortage of spare parts.

Sadat has made no secret of Egypt's need for new air defence equipment. But the Egyptians have been restricted to what they could afford from western suppliers who wanted payment in hard currency. Egypt is awaiting delivery of its first battery of French-built Crotale missiles, but is now expected to ask the U.S. for Hawks as well.

In another sign of Egypt's growing military relationship with the U.S., a team of Egyptian air force officers is to visit the U.S. next month to see what combat jets might be available in addition to F-5s. Egypt is believed to be willing to settle for the F-4 Phantom, if it cannot get the more advanced F-15 or F-16.

Since the Phantom production line is all but shut down, it may be necessary for Egypt to select used aircraft from American surplus stock, military sources here said.

Uganda shuts airport; mop up continues

NAIROBI. - Uganda's provisional government put Entebbe airport "out of bounds" yesterday and said it could not handle aircraft.

The surprise announcement blamed repairs for the closing, although charter planes have been using the two-runway field ever since the fall of Kampala.

Closing the airfield would cut off virtually all communication with the capital except that authorized by the new government or its Tanzanian military allies.

The announcement came a day after Tanzania and anti-Amin Ugandan forces began a major move into still-uncaptured territory, and there was speculation that it was an effort to clamp down on information.

Kenyan police, meanwhile, were in the second day of rounding up an estimated 1,000 Ugandan refugees amid calls that they be sent back. "Why are they running away if they are not criminals?" legislator

Mwangi Mathai said in Kenya's parliament. The Ugandans were reported being taken to a refugee camp at Kakamega for questioning apparent-ly aimed at finding those with awkward links to the government of pusted dictator Idi Amin.

One such refugee was expected to be Maj. Bob Astles, Amin's shadowy British born aide, who Nairobi police reported was being held in an up-country jail after fleeing into Kenya. Tanzanian and allied Ugandan troops yesterday pushed north and east in a two-branched campaign they hoped would give them control of the violence-torn east and the vital road to Kenya.

Amin's whereabouts were still a mystery as the drive went into its second day.

Officers said their two columns were to link up again in the north in about one month, and would then prepare to move into Amin's home territory in the northwest, near Sudan and Zaire. (AP, Reuter)

After announcing the four acquittals despite the interruptions, the judges withdrew until the protesters left the courtroom.

After the judge left the hall, the protesters continued singing for about half an hour, and then went to a nearby synagogue where they laid wreaths of red roses while singing.

The public prosecution proposed the acquittals a week ago, saying that 35 years after the event, it had been unable to find surviving witnesses who could "prove beyond a reasonable doubt" that any of the four had committed murder at Nine other men and women r sels main on trial on charges of participating in mass murders at the selection concentration camp between 186 per selections

Ultimately, Sadat's only hope of recapturing influence within the Arab world depends on convincing

IN TERMS of military support, U.S. sources say there is absolutely no likelihood of a wholesale American refurbishing and re-equipping of the Egyptian armed forces along the lines suggested by Sadat to Brown in Sadat, they note, has genuinely legitimate concerns about the geopolitical implications of the chaos that hit Iran spreading through the Middle East and leaving Egypt isolated in a sea of hostile, radically oriented states.

But, the sources add, Egypt's geographic, political and financial Egypt would have to be outright gifts. The sources say there is no chance of such largesse being approved by Congress, which is still smarting from the experience of Iran and concerned that the balance of Israel's military superiority over Egypt not be disturbed until it becomes a lot clearer that the Egyptian-Israeli peace is going to stick.

made clear to Sadat, the sources say, and the indications are that he has accommodated his expectations of military aid to them. But, the sources add, both the Administration and Congress are sympathetic to the argument that Egypt does have some legitimate military needs and that the U.S. should be receptive to more modest, scaled-down requests. Much of the Soviet equipment on which the Egyptian forces are largely dependent is outmoded or in need of replacement, and the U.S. is actively studying ways to help the Egyptian military increase its defen-sive capability to deal with potential threats from neighbouring countries like Libya and the Sudan or in sub-Saharan areas like the Horn of Africa.

As a first step in this direction Carter, acting under commitments made to Sadat during the treaty negotiations, is asking Congress for a supplemental appropriation of $1.5 billion in military scales credits for Egypt.

While there is no likelihood of U.S. military assistance climbing to the billion-dollar-plus-a-year level provided to Israel, U.S. sources predict that arms aid to Sadat will continue to increase and eventually make Washington the principal supplier of the Egyptian military.

THERE IS ALSO the question of economic and development aid. While it hasn't received as much attention as military assistance, many Administration sources think this is potentially the most important area of greater U.S.-Egyptian

That attitude also stems from the experience of Iran. As one State Department official put it: "An army of 700,000 men with the best weapons money could buy wasn't able to save the Shah when he got out of tune with the desires and aspirations of his people.

"Thus," he continued, "our advice know what his people want and convince them that he's trying to give it to them. We think that Sadat, in pursuing peace with Israel, was responding to what the Egyptian people try to help him to take the next step: using the peace to look inward at Egypt's internal problems and solving them to provide a better life for its people."

to any Middle Eastern leaders is to Again, administration sources stress that the U.S. can't give Sadat a blank cheque or even underwrite a major role in Egypt's monumental development needs. But Carter's post-treaty supplemental request to Congress includes $300m. for Egyptian development aid, and the sources say there'll be more to come in this area.

In the view of many officials, the big problem will involve not so much amounts of aid as ensuring that the Egyptian government uses it in ways that will tamp down potential unrest by effectively treating the country's most pressing needs.

Under a category of financial aid known as security supporting assistance, Egypt tentatively is to receive $750 million from the U.S. during the 1980 fiscal year, the largest single amount directed at a lesser developed country.

RECENTLY, Roy L. Prosterman, a University of Washington law professor who does an annual rating assessment of the foreign aid programme, gave the Egypt Programme a grade of "D." In his study, Prosterman charged that roughly 95 per cent of the money is slated to go into projects - expensive housing, large agribusiness development and improvement of the telephone system — that he said will provide no benefits for the country's poor masses. The result, he predicted, will widen the gap petween rich and poor and incr the danger of an upheaval similar to what happened in Iran. !

That's precisely what the Administration wants to prevent, and officials privately make no secret about what's at stake. As one Middle East policy-maker sums it up:

"We want a peaceful and stable Middle East, and we can't have it un-less Egypt is peaceful and stable. It's wrong and futile to think of making it a client or a military surrogate. But if we're going to achieve our policy goals in the region, we have no choice other than to convince Sadat firmly and irrevocably that a close relationship with the U.S. on a broad range of interests gives him a better shot at meeting his needs than any Egypt a Middle Eastern military surrogate," Church says. "The last thing we want to do is build up a new military colossus out there and then find it turning out like Iran, with Sadat no longer president and the whole place in chaos." His warning doesn't provoke any arguments from Administration policy-makers. While making no secret of their hope that Egypt will become an increasingly dependable ally and a force for stability in the Middle East, they also insist that the administration has no intention of trying to nominate any country as the regional successor to Iran.

Instead, Administration sources say, the thrust of U.S. Middle Eastern policy will be to cultivate informal but close ties with a number of key countries - Israel, Saudi Arabia and Jordan, as well as Egypt - that share the general Western goal of stability in the region whose geographic position and oil resources are so crucial to world

To bolster these ties, the sources add. Washington is planning a number of initiatives, such as a more visible U.S. military presence, to give pro-Western governments a reater sense of self-assurance, and beefed-up infusions of American aid to help friendly countries deal more effectively with their internal

Within this context, Egypt, as the largest and most militarily powerful country of the Arab world, is obviously of vital importance to American planning. And, while U.S. officials wince visibly at the suggestion of a "client-state" relationship, they concede that keeping Egypt on track toward peace with Israel and good relations with the West will require a very high degree of U.S. money and moral support for Sadat.

As the leader of a desperately poor country plagued with all the classic symptoms of underdevelopment, overpopulation and low life expectancy, Sadat urgently needs a wealthy patron able to help him frankly that each involves some potentially sensitive problems. Of the three, the diplomatic problems are the most immediate.

Because the peace treaty with Israel has isolated Sadat from the other Arab countries, Sadat needs Washington to run interference for him in his drive to regain Egypt's good standing within the Arab world. In part, that means the use of U.S. influence to try to heal the breach with countries like Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, whose oil wealth has helped to keep the Sadat government financially afloat.

suspicious Arab governments that he can solve the Palestinian problem through negotiations rather than confrontation with Israel.

A solution widely acceptable to the Arabs is almost certain to involve concessions beyond what Israel is prepared to make. While it is too early to tell which way the West Bank-Gaza negotiations will go, some U.S. officials fear they will produce conflicts that could cause Sadat to expect President Carter to put pressures on Israel greater than what is politically feasible for an American president.

circumstances are so different from those of Iran that Sadat has no logical hope of aspiring to the kind of policeman's role that the Shah tried to carve out for himself.

For one thing, Sadat lacks the vast oil wealth that enabled the Shah to pay cash for modern, sophisticated weaponry. Even the one significant U.S.-Egyptian military deal that has been arranged so far, the purchase of 50 American F-5E jet fighters, is dependent upon the still unclear question of whether Saudi Arabia will pick up the bill for Sadat. OPINION polis still show the Conservatives with a big, but gradually dwindling, lead.

Those polls, which a week ago gave Mrs Thatcher's team a 16 per cent lead over Labour now give them 13 per cent. Those which originally gave 12 per cent give 10 per cent. Only one, national opinion Polls published on Tuesday, put the Tory lead as low as 6 per cent. But even that would be enough not only to put a woman in 10 Downing Street for the first time in history but also to give the Conservatives a comfortable working majority - something that Labour was denied for the past five years. In all the opinion polls, the Liberals are not faring too well — less than 10 per cent at best. Party leader Steel is campaigning for an end to the "two-party system" which enables the Conservatives and the socialists to play political ping-pong among themselves. He is asking the country to give neither a working majority, but to put the Liberals in the kind of situation which emerged in the last parliament, in which only a Lib-Lab

Steel is also calling for a change in the electoral system. He wants proportional representation so that if his party again polls more than five million votes, as it did in 1974, it will be rewarded with more than the measly 13 seats it had last time.

In fact, he has made it clear that if neither the Tories nor Labour gets a working majority, he will refuse to consider a "pact" unless there is a "copper-bottomed, cast-iron" guarantee from the prospective partner that proportional representation will be introduced in time for the next general election.

But Mrs. Thatcher this week ruled out the possibility of any Tory-Lib

No single issue has appeared to be dominant, though all are connected in some way with the economy, foreign policy, apart from odd references in party manifestos to Rhodesia and the EEC, is playing no part in this campaign. Nor is it likely to.

WHATEVER the result may be, the new house of Commons will be missing some well known faces- people who have announced that they are not seeking re-election. Foremost among these is Mrs. Barbara Castle, former Employment and Social Services Secretary.

Though aged 67, she is not retiring from politics—only from purely British politics. She is standing for election to the European parliament on June 7 as one of Britain's 81 representatives there.

Also not standing is a former Labour Foreign Secretary, Michael Stewart. Another familiar face that might be missing — unwillingly — is that of the current Foreign Secretary, Dr. David Owen, whose majority in his Plymouth constituency is just over 2.000.

THE TIME has come to sing the glories of Ehud Ya'ari, Israel Television's correspondent in Cairo, on and off, ever since the first Israeli journalists got through the bulrush curtain in December, 1977.

Ehud has kept us fascinated by a constant flow of interviews, com-mentaries and features, all of them of a high standard.

He ended with a real blaze of fireworks - interviews with Premier Mustapha Khalil, Minister for Foreign Affairs Butros Ghali and Said Mari, the friend who represented President Anwar Sadat at the Nobel Peace Prize ceremony in Oslo last year. Finally, just before he came home to Israel, he went to watch the Egyptian soccer cup final.

Summing up the latest mood among the Egyptian leaders, he stressed that the time has come for both Israelis and Egyptians to stop making martial noises and to use a low key in their major addresses. This was said by all three men whom he interviewed, although Khalil seems to have been a flagrant offender against his own precept in some of his recent observations.

It seemed to me that the wisest remarks were made by Mari. as was perhaps to be expected from a man who handled the Nobel Peace Prize, although only vicariously. He said that the man-in-the-street in both Egypt and Israel is not interested in article this or that of the treaty, subjects which may be of inmoern to politicians and intellectuals in the two countries. The man-in-the-street wants to know what's in it for him.

FROM WHAT Ehud showed us of the Egyptian football match, their players do not seem to be so formidable, and I wouldn't be surprised if we could give them a go, provided a match against them doesn't interfere with the local league schedule. A recent aports documentary on TV made it abundantly clear that most of our players are more concerned about their clubs winning than about the honour of represen-ting Israel in the national side.

I am not even sure that a soccer match between Egypt and Israel is the best way to promote the peace and normalization we all desire so ardently. A football match resulted some years ago in a war breaking out between two Latin American countries. Some of the remarks addressed by Jerusalem Betar fans to players in an opposing team may well cause sensitive Egyptians to také umbrage.

Broadcasting Authority, which supervises Britain's commercial TV stations, recently gave an assurance that the version of "Soldier Blue" shown on TV was not the one that got an "adults-only" certificate in the

No film nowadays, apparently, is made in just one version. The mind boggles, though, at what the script conferences of multi-versioned films must be like....

Ed, I think we've got the plot problem licked. Like this: We open on Cinderella in the kitchen, the poor kid's crying her eyes out because the dishwasher's gone wrong. So's the micro-wave oven and the laser-beam bber. Everything, I mean the lot. So in comes Buttons, he's the kitchen aide, he fixes everything sip-zap, the last thing, he wedges the freezer door shut with a card. You go OUR MAN IN CAIRO

There is such a thing as having an excess of normalization. It is safer to begin our cultural contacts by sending Prof. Yigael Yadin to look at the Cairo Museum.

Some persons might find reason to complain that Ehud Ya'ari's comments and style were far too pro-Egyptian by the time he left Egypt. Resident journalists and ambassadors often tend to sympathize with the people among whom they are stationed, perhaps because they start to deal with them as individuals instead of as stereotypes.

If Ehud was won over by the subtle Egyptians, we certainly benefited, because his coverage improved immensely, and he got his interviewees to talk away at great length and without reservations. I hope he'll be back in Egypt soon.

TALKING about normalization, I happen to have spent the holiday week in Ashkelon where it is generally impossible to watch Israel Television because of Egyptian interference. This week the reception was perfect. I hope that this is not just a coincidence, but that the Egyptians are no longer crashing across our channel.

From our side, I think it was rather churlish of 80,000 Israelis to rush down to the Red Sea and to remove as many corals and shells as they could before the takeover by the Egyptians. The patriotic vandals appear to have forgotten that the aim is to have open borders, so that we will still want to see the wonders of the deep, even if the shore is controlled by the Egyptians. Destroying coral, which loses its colour and looks downright stupid on a vandal's mantelpiece, is cutting off a nose to spite a face that was not very attractive to begin with.

MANY items of news, and a goodly part of the weekend magazine, were devoted to strikes, inflation and soaring prices. In reporting on the 5.6 per cent rise in the price index Haim Yavin produced that businessman who says that it is impossible for him to maintain overseas exports, built up so laboriously over years, if he hasn't the faintest idea what his prices will be in a few months time. Buyers abroad, the businessman claimed, simply don't understand Israeli in-just to make me eat my words of criticism, the team left with a bang. not a whimper: the final episode was very good indeed. A few weeks ago, a four-year-old, watching the programme with me, confirmed my diagnosis by saying. "That's not a happy family: they shout at each other all the time." This week. however, they were affectionate, considerate and attractive. Everybody had a problem, which was treated thoughtfully by other members of the family, without using that whining, irritable tone to which they have made us accustomed. The most interesting issue was posed by the teenaged daughter, who had decided that she wanted to leave school, where she was studying humanities, in favour of learning such useful subjects for a modern homemaker as carpentry, plumbing, and electricity. This urge was inspired by a friend who was a divorcee, and who was collapsing under the burden of keeping the home fires burning, the home taps giving water and the home furniture

Despite her troubles, the divorcee. when asked why she went on with the divorce, insisted that a woman could not stick to a man just because he could do the household repairs.

It is hard to think of a better reason for keeping a marriage intact. A generation ago, Richard Aldington ridiculed the system of choosing mates because of the weird chemical attraction called love, without making suitable enquiries as to ability to function as a combination-electrician-plumbercarpenter-builder-motor mechanic. And this was written in the days when it was possible to find fixit men for normal prices.

Far be it from me to belittle either romantic love or an education in the humanities. Love is the most wonderful of all emotions: it keeps the human race going. But it does help if the grand passion is sandwiched between some practical ability. So, too, with the broad mind developed by the humanities — this is not inconsistent with being able to keep the household functioning.
We will miss that family, now that they have grown so close together.

ONE OF THE anti-Eurovision critics telephoned to me in triumph to report that "The New Statesman" had come out with a scathing criticism of the contest, and of the way Israel handled it. The critic lambasted the set, the pantomime. the songs, everything. I'll have him know that the last time "The New Statesman" ever went right about anything was some time in the 1930's. So their comments pass me by like the idle wind, which I esteem

THE BOLD recommendation of the committee headed by Interior Ministry Director-General Haim Kubersky that Israel should introduce a commercial TV channel makes the experience of Dutch television of particular interest, since the Dutch faced problems that in many respects resembled those besetting this country's television. Erik Jurgens, chairman of the Netherlands Broadcasting Corpora-tion and a former member of the Dutch parliament remarked on this recently during his visit here to attend the Eurovision contest.

"Our broadcasting corporation is completely independent," he told me. "Its members represent a crosssection of the different religious. political and social interests in the country. There are altogether 33 members of my board, of whom 16 represent various organizations. The rest are selected from all walks of society by the government. I'm supposed to keep the balance between them all. It's rather like walking a

"We have a Catholic represen-tative, two Protestants (one of them fundamentalist), one Liberal, a Socialist, two general groups with no specifical political profile but somewhere right of centre, one avant garde.

"Everybody gets television time proportionate to their group's size to use however they like, except that I try to coordinate so as to make sure that they do not all say the same thing all the time. In fact, since there is so much competition in Europe, they all try to provide attractive material so as to keep their sup-

"Apart from their programmes, the Corporation itself has one-fifth of broadcasting time to supplement what the others give, and we do all the newscasts in what I trust is an impartial way. We are also responsible for providing all the technical facilities.'

Does this system result in a great deal of indigenous production of imaginative work?

"Unfortunately, everybody uses too much canned stuff.. It's a problem of budget. We have 14 million Dutchmen and six million Dutch-speaking Belgians, too small a market to encourage the production of expensive, imaginative material. Such work costs a great deal compared to buying dramatic series from outside Holland. We do, however, get a lot of good locally made documentaries.

Three-quarters of the budget comes from licence fees, one-quarter from advertisements. Advertising is based on the BBC system : the advertisers have no control whatsoever over what the content of programmes should be, and they are given set spots allocated to them.

"To help newspapers," Jurgens added, "We keep the advertising limited. Otherwise all the advertising income would go to television, and newspapers might have to

Then Cindy could find the fuse somewhere — in the plant? no, that's corny — in Teddy's bedroom, she'd have to go up there out of curlosity of course for the French version we could have her up there with him anyway, needn't be indecent, we'd still get a British certificate, they could just talk about it, Cindy just in her slip. Then she twigs something's going to go bang, she rushes out of the building, he rushes after her,

So then she holes up with the sisters - I guess we have to have them protecting her, and Teddy's after her, but so's the fuzz because she must have been in the know, right? And it's a chase across the city who will get to her first, we could run the cars up the steps of the Capitol.

SO HERE'S the final shoot-out, with the ugly sisters getting shot by the fuzz in the U.S. version; but by that kitchen alde from the first scene in the Russian one - he'd do as a clean young worker ... unless maybe we wanted to have him shot, while they

And for Italy we can have Cindy and Teddy staggering out hand-inhand into the sunlight, lots of old bells peeling in the church tower -

But nothing too much for the U.S. version, 'cos we'll need to run the credits over it - World Wild Life Fund for loan of the cat, CIA, FBI MGM — everyone — maybe they'd put up some funds? We could even credit the KGB if you thought it

A sculptured animal kingdom

ART NOTES

FOR THE first time in many years a thorough exhibit of Yosef Constant's (1892-1969) animal sculpture hasbeen mounted at the Hadassa "K"

Gallery in Tel Aviv. Constant (Constantinovsky) was born in Jaffa but returned to Russia with his parents while still an infant. He enrolled in the Odessa Academy of Art in 1914 and came to Palestine in 1919 after his father was assassinated for revolutionary activities. Eventually, Paris became his home until 1952. After that he divided his time between Paris and a Ramat Gan studio until his death in Constant devoted all his energy to creating "personalities" from the animal kingdom.

Using wood, stone or bronze casting, he carved a menagerie of domestic pets and wild beasts, including cats, goats, fowl, bear, eagles, dogs and monkeys. Constant strived to capture the essential qualities of the creature which ultimately led to obvious gestures and patently described poses.
Whether concentrating on a single subject or group compositions he was pre-occupied with the "rightness" of the formal figure and was less concerned with the plastic qualities of sculpture. One has only to compare Constant's art with works by Brancusi, Lipshitz or even Rudi Lehmann to appreciate the differences between their priorities and Constant's.

AS A BODY of work, Constant's sculptures are conventional; they qualities. Also, they cover a broad range of styles and techniques. Expressionist inspired, bold sivilzation or lyrically drawn. Constent maintained a subjective bent throughout his career. It is impossible to tell from this exhibit if he continually sought to define, clarify or reconsider specific peculiarities in . his work.

The gallery has not provided any information regarding the chronology of the individual pieces. nor has it bothered to present an overall attractive display. Large sculptures are poorly lit and often, unforgivably, placed flatly against walls. All the smaller maquettes and table-top studies are "benched," en mass, well below the average sight

One gets the impression that the gallery has the attitude that the name Constant is enough to carry the show.

THE BIG question this week for Begin-watchers: Why did Premier Messahem Begin choose this moment of history to settle old accounts with the late David Ben-Gurion? Did he think he would rally back to him those people in the old IZL and LHY. now seeking his downfall over his peace policies? Why did he offer Labour Party Chairman Shimon Peres and his colleagues such an opportunity to accuse him of reducing himself from being the national leader to the head of Herut and Betar? Or is he, as some people claim, doing what BG used to do. Whenever the Mapai government was in a fix the Old Man used to mention the Altalena incident, raising blood pressure levels on Herut benches, releasing a chain reaction which extricated the government from a corner? IF ANYONE has noticed, relations have somewhat cooled down between the prime minister and U.S. ambassador Samuel Lewis. Perhaps the press corps' cracks about the High Commissioner calling on the District Officer whenever Lewis visited Begin got under the latter's skin. Aides to the prime minister are already referring to the amalready referring to the am-bassador's residence as "Capitol Hill in Herzliya-on-Sea," to express top-level displeasure at the too-often coming-and-going of politicians from coalition and opposition benches to gone a trifle too far in trying to manipulate Israeli public opinion over the government's head.

Lewis' dinner parties.
But American diplomats argue that Lewis is doing no less than Israeli ambassador Ephraim (Epple) Evron and his predecessors, in Washington's Embassy Row with American legislators.

What ired official sensibilities most was Lewis' handing out of good and bad marks in the conduct of the negotiations with Egypt, especially his statement that the negotiations could have been concluded earlier at

This implied criticism of both the orime minister and Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan.

One Begin aide pointed out that if Lewis says, "I do not feel any cooling-off in my relations with the prime minister," why did he have to BEGIN-WATCHERS are also closely following his manner of addressing Cabinet ministers. At Cabinet meetings, he invariably refers to them by their formal titles, and will preface it with "Adoni..." (i.e. Mr. Minister) when he is annoyed with the said minister.

smallest government party.

The question posed: "Who is best to succeed Begin to the Premiership?" Somehow, when the party got round to releasing the results. Tamir's name had crept in after Peres and Welzman, and before Yadin, What caused eyebrows to be raised among the deputy premier's entourage is the fact that the Justice Minister's name was not offered as one of the select list of prospective premiers.

Perhaps both sides were looking closely at "others," the category of left-overs in most polis. The last JP poll commissioned from Modi'in Ezrachi, gave infinitesimal results for both contenders, with Yadin "way ahead" of Tamir with 0.5 per cent support for the next foreign

So far Patt's efforts have been fruitless, with the founder of Israel's tourist industry, Meir (Memi) De Shalit, declining the ministerial offer, preferring to stay in his own hotel business and remain Yadin's right-hand man as treasurer of the Democrats.

LITERARY circles are aflutter at the news that poet Natan Zak is about to break his 13-year-old silence. Often referred to as "the T.S. Eliot of contemporary Hebrew verse." Zak returned two years ago from a decade's stay in England, where he completed his Ph.D. at Essex University.
His first book of poems after 13 years is to be published in two months' time by the Kibbutz Hamuehad publishing house under the title, "North-Easterly."

TEL AVIV University academicians are still buzzing over the reverberations of the acid attack by visiting Professor George Steiner during his lectures there on "nitpicking professors who discuss literature without ever having en-joyed reading a book, and thereby destroy students' capacity to properly understand literature."

Steiner was referring to the University's Centre for the Study of Comparative Literature, recently en-dowed with the princely sum of £5 million (sterling) by Leslie Porter, President of the Tesco supermarket chain in Britain and one of the Joint Israel Appeal's big-givers.

Local education lists were pleased that Steiner had expressed their resentment at what they regard as the misdirection of Porter's munificence, at a time when university libraries are shrinking for lack

The Jerusalem Post on the eve of the Pessah parliamentary recess meant that the prevailing tone among Knesset Members was that they held their seats by virtue of right and privilege, owed account to no man, and were not required to put in an honest day's parliamentary work.

The chairman of the Likud faction. Avrahan Sharir, also complained that aspiring parliamentarians who pledged such diligent work before the general elections were often elusive after they got their seats.

A former Likud whip, Pessah

Grupper, who has top marks for attendance in the Foreign Affairs and Defence Committee, told The Post: "As far as I can see there are about 20 full-time Knesset Members. If you subtract those 20 from the 120 total membership, and subtract another 20 or so who are cabinet ministers and deputy ministers, that leaves you 80 MKs who think they were elected as part-time parliamentarians."

Grupper recalls that when he first entered the Knesset in 1973 he dropped everything else, and decided to be a Parliamentarian six days a week. "I never go abroad during sessions, and when I go during recess I pay my own fare," Grupper declared with evident selfsatisfaction.

Grupper conceded that attendance at other parliaments is not im-pressive. However, he argues: "You can't build a new country, with its innumerable problems, if you take it easy, as though you've had independence and solvency for cen-

Sharir told The Post: "Far too many MKs stay away because they have lucrative or interesting or prestigious activities elsewhere. Here all they have is hard work, and they don't all like it."

THE EMPTINESS of the Knesset chamber is no novelty, but the advent of television brought this fact home to the public.

Knesset apologists, some ranking as high as Speakers, have contended that the chamber is empty because the MKs are busy in the committees. These apologists years ago omitted to mention to the complaining public that committee sessions were not allowed while the plenum was in ses-my Lapid, is on record that the plenum is often empty because the MKs are doing the real work for which they were elected, in their committees.

The facts are otherwise, as emerges from registers of attendance in the committees, which are printed below. They cover the period from January 1, 1979 to a few days before the end of the session, over two and a half months.

The average attendance in all the committees lumped together is around 50 per cent. In the Foreign Affairs and Defence Committee, where attendance is highest, only five of the 25 members attended fewer than half the meetings. As it happened, three of the five were former Labour cabinet ministers. whose claim to seats on the committee were the main reason for its

In the Finance Committee, which also has good attendance because it is an influential body, only six of the 21 members attended fewer than half the meetings. In the House Committee, 12 of the 21 members attended fewer than half the meetings. In the Economic Committee, 11 of the 16 members attended fewer than half the meetings, and of these 11, three had a zero record, including that well-known businessman, Samuel Flatto-Sharon, and Herut's top economist, Yigal Cohen-Orgad.

IN THE INTERIOR Committee, five of the 15 members attended fewer than half the meetings. In the Law Committee, five of the 16 members attended fewer than half the meetings. In the Immigration and Absorption Committee, whose membership seems vague, in some instances seven of the 14 members whose names appear on the register attended fewer than half the meetings, and one of these, Shlomo Eliahu (DM) had a zero record.

In the Education Committee, 10 of the 19 members attended fewer than half the meetings, and of these, two had a zero score: Herut's Geula Cohen, who has years of educational experience, and La'am's Ehud Olmert, who has often aimed his political message at youth. Yet another top educator, Haim Druckman (NRP) came to only one meeting. Uri Avneri (Shelli) appears with the score of his colleague, Meir Pa'il, but never attended meetings personally. In the Labour and Social Services Hadar (Alignment) - 20: Yehezkel

Committee, four of the 15 members came to fewer than half the meetings. Black Panther Charlie Biton, notably, attended one meeting

Because of the number of committees and their size, nearly 180 committee seats have to be filled. Since ministers and deputy ministers do not occupy committee seats, each MK should hold two scats. occasionally three. Committees tend to call sessions at the same hours, although this could generally be avoided if more goodwill and efficient planning existed.

Efforts have been made several times to make the committees smaller. They always failed, because of the MKs who demand places of honour in the prestigious or influential committees. For instance, a recent plan to cut down the ridiculously large Foreign Affairs and Defence Committee (25 seats) was foiled by the Alignment. All five Alignment ex-ministers, Eban, Allon, Bar-Lev, Peres and Rabin required seats, plus three more Alignment men, which swelled the overall number from other factions, to give party balance.

The appearance of an MK's name on the register may not mean much. He is registered, even if he only drops in for five minutes to vote, but stays away the other two hours or so. Actual attendance at any one time is always far less than total attendance at the meeting.

THE AVERAGE attendance. therefore, for all committees and all MKs, of between 50 and 60 per cent, refers to attendance during a small ortion of all meetings. The number of full-time Knesset members who come to committees at the start of the session, who consider themselves personally responsible for committee business, and who stay to the end, is much closer to the 20 per cent mentioned by Grupper and his boss Sharir. These fulltimers are the MKs who give the taxpayer value for his money.

It has been contended that if each MK had to attend only one committee, he would give a more diligent parliamentary performance. This is not impossible to imagine, but it may never be proved, because too many MKs rate dignity and prestige much higher than hard work, and so they would not agree to reduce the number and the membership of the

If statistics were compiled of the number of times an MK attended all the sessions held of plenum and of the committees to which he belonged, and if the period of time he sat inside was also calculated, even more interesting facts would emerge. It is high time that some political science students were assigned to carry out

One point which redresses the balance to some small extent is the existence of sub-committees, formed of members of the regular committees. But there are generally attended by the MKs who are active on the regular committees in any case, not by the defaulters, whose attendance record is thus not improved. It is noteworthy that experts in certain fields, assigned to committees responsible for those fields, are sometimes the most inactive. The reason: their resentment at the MKs running that committee, or at their factions, for installing them to play second fiddle. This category includes well-known lawyers, also noteworthy that certain factions which attract the limelight in the plenum, like the DFPE and Shelli, are proportionately less active in the committees. They leave the welfare of the common man to the less progressive factions.

Caucasians will go it alone

By LEA LEVAVI Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. -- A group of young immigrants from the Caucasus who complain that no one in Israel is willing to listen to their problems has decided to form its own immigrants' association. A national conference for this purpose will be held sometime within the next month.

The Caucasians in the Russian Immigrants Association came many years ago and do not understand the new mentality of today's Caucasian immigrants, the latter charge. There are also no Caucasian immigrants among absorption workers, they complain, which heightens the newcomers' feelings of alienation.

"The Caucasian immigrants want to live near their relatives and friends," says Shmaya Shalmayav, a building technician who came here five years ago. "If there were someone at the airport who spoke their language and understood their mentality, maybe he would be able to explain to them that they're better off not to live with their relatives but to go where there is work or good schools." What happens in practice is that many Caucasians, unwilling to go where the Absorption Ministry wants to send them, go to homes of relatives who usually cannot accommodate them since the families tend to be large. In some cases, this leads to bitterness and even blows, and such incidents help establish the stereotype of Caucasian immigrants

"There are about 20 per cent who come from primitive areas and don't make a good impression. Shalmayav said, "but that doesn" mean all of us are primitive."

as primitive.

MOST OF THE Caucasians seem to be skilled and semiskilled workers, but instead of feeling needed and welcomed they feel scorned and discriminated against.

Even where the problems are objective - the Caucasian history teacher who can't teach here, or the abstract artist who formerly received a salary from the Soviet government to paint and who can't make a living as an artist here - the Caucasians still fee! that maybe it would be different if they weren't

"Why doesn't someone send the history teacher to a social workers'

THIS COLUMN last week was devoted to the remarkable wealth of flora mentioned in the Song of Songs which was read last Sabbath in synagogue. Only one item was omitted from my column, which is the subject of this one. Omitted were two flowers: havatzelet of the Sharon, which is mentioned only once, and the in the same verse, but in addition on no less than 5 other occasions in this short poem (3:5, 5:13, 6:2, 6:13, and 7:3). Not only are they the only flowers mentioned in the Song of Songs but, incredible though it may seem, they are the only flowers mentioned in the whole Bible. (The havatzelet is mentioned again in Isaiah 35:1). It cannot be said that the author of the Song, with his eyes and soul open to every other aspect of the floral beauty of the Land of Israel, was inensitive to this, the most beautiful of all. In addition to these two flowers, his mind is attracted by the blossoms of of fruit trees in general have taken place in the world of flora in its literal sense of "flowers." In his gardening column in The Jerusalem Post on February 12, Walter Frankl suggested flowers for planting at Tu Bl'Shvat. His list includes more than a dozen annuals, six perennials and three blennials. Millions of flowers are now grown in this country, making Israel one of the leading flower growers in the world and bringing in valuable foreign currency from exports. Long

BY THE VERY NATURE of things, the attitude of the United States government to the various issues emanating from the peace treaty is of central importance. However, it is worth contemplating also the attitudes of the second superpower, the Soviet Union, with its extreme negative reaction to the treaty and the impending negotiations on

The interests and involvements of the Soviet Union in our region are only too evident. However, it appears that of late the Russians have made a number of blunders which helped President Sadat indirectly in his decision to bring the negotiations to a conclusion.

From the outset, a principal concern of President Sadat has been the attitude of Saudi Arabia to his peace initiative, and this for obvious reasons. It is generally assumed that his abrupt withdrawal of the Egyptian delegation from the political committee meetings in Jerusalem in January 1978 was a result of a realization that, contrary to what he had been led to believe, Saudi Arabia and Jordan were unwilling to support his initiative even tacitly and had abandoned him.

Saudi Arabia has always been schizophrenic to a degree, On the one hand there is its traditional hostility to Israel and Zionism. On the other, the danger of the spread of com-munist influence in the region is a major concern. Whenever the Soviet danger has seemed remote, open Saudi hostility to Israel has been emphasized. When the Soviet threat loomed closer, a marked moderation in its attitude to Israel could be weathers until the government finally made a compromise and enabled them to take over part of the no less stony area of the army camp at Kadum, which is Elon Moreh.

Entirely natural was the promise made by Prime Minister Begin during that visit that now there would be many more Elon Morehs. That promise, which rang round the world, lifted up many hearts in Israel and caused much grashing of committed a serious error, which conceivably created an atmosphere of which President Sadat was to take advantage. I refer to the South Yemen invasion of Yemen. It may well be that the initiative for that peration was local. But the Soviet Union enjoys considerable influence in South Yemen, with its contingent of Russian, East German and Cuban advisers. Whether or not the invasion was organized or instigated by Moscow, the credit for it is attributed to the Soviet Union. In any event, it was a move that acca as twin dangers has influenced the Saudis in deciding on their at-titude to President Sadat's moves. In this connection the Soviet Union

quite rightly aroused the deepest concern in Saudi Arabia. Saudi Arabia's population today numbers some six million. One third of these are foreigners, including one and a half million Yemenites. A union of the two Yemens would create a bloc of seven million people controlled by communist South Yemen, the largest bloc in the Arabian peninsula. That could spell serious danger for Saudi Arabia.

Saudi Arabia appealed urgently to the U.S. The American government realized that it must wean itself from its Vietnam complex if it is to retain any credibility as a major power in the Middle East, particularly after the Iranian debacle. Accordingly, U.S. aid to Yemen was immediate and forthcoming. An airlift was mounted carrying military supplies; electronic surveillance aircraft were flown to the area; and an offer was made to position F-15 aircraft in Saudi Arabia. Naval forces were rushed to the Arabian Sea from the Philippine Sea, and the creation of a U.S. Fifth Fleet for the area of the

MOSCOW AND THE PEACE TREATY

Allowing the Soviet Union a role, however indirect, in the implementation of the Israel-Egypt peace treaty is an error we may live to regret, says CHAIM HERZOG.

Persian Gulf, the Red Sea and the Arabian Sea was mooted.

Thus, in addition to all the common interests linking the U.S. and Saudi Arabia, a very zeal new defence dimension was added by the developments in Yemen. For obvious reasons, this dictated to Saudia Arabia a posture of comparative moderation in respect of U.S. interests, including the Israel-Egyptian treaty. President Sadat, for his part, was undoubtedly only too aware of the effect of these developments on Saudi attitudes.

The serious error in the timing of the attack on Yemen has already proven an expensive one for the Russians, in that it helped a process which strengthened the position of the West in the area.

THE SOVIET reaction to the Israel-Egypt treaty came as no surprise. It was extremely critical. But apart from rhetoric, the Soviet Union could do no more than despatch Foreign Minister Gromyko on a hasty visit to Damascus, a visit which did not change the situation in any way. There may or may not have been an agreement to supply additional Soviet arms to Syria.

Gromyko's visit was obviously a face-saving device, designed to emphasize Soviet presence in the area on the occasion of such a central development as a peace treaty between Israel and Egypt.

The Russians wished, too, to strengthen their position in Ivaq and Syria, which because of their geographical proximity to southern Russia, have a special place in Soviet strategic considerations. Furthermore, the Russians are interested in strengthening the relectionist front and their main foothold in the Middle East, which is South

However, there was no reason to expect Soviet reaction beyond the protests and vituperative rhetoric which one has become accustomed to in such circumstances. A hallmark of Soviet policy has been the hestitation which characterizes the Soviet leadership, weakened by the illness of President Brezhnev and also by the rather advanced age of the other members of the Politburo. Their slowness in reacting, and the hesitant form of their reaction when it comes, are evidence of leadership problems that beset the Kremlin.

It is all the more regrettable, therefore, that those who drafted the Egyptian-Israel peace treaty consciously presented the Soviet Union with an active role in the implementation of the agreement. Very unwisely, as I wrote at the time, the negotiators at the treaty decided to involve the UN under the terms of the military annexe. By so doing, they broadened the scope of Soviet activity from demonstrative visits by Foreign Minister Gromyko and verbal attacks, to the practical possibility of influencing the im-plementation of part of the agreement. As James Reston, the renowned columnist of the "New York Times," has pointed out, this error introduces the Soviet Union to the process by means of the back door.

ty Council convened to renew the mandate of the United Nations Forces in Sinai (UNEF), the Soviet Union made it quite clear what might be expected in the future, but those who should have paid attention to this warning apparently ignored it. Israel and Egypt agreed to a renewal of the mandate for one year. as they have done annually since 1975. But this time, the Soviet Union did not agree, and the compromise was a renewal for nine months only, which period will end on July 24. The Soviet delegate to the UN, Ambassador Troyanovsky, has aiready publicly indicated that votes in the Security Council for a further renewal "may not be available," because a favourable vote could be interpreted as Soviet acquiescence in the Israel-Egypt peace treaty.

I personally believe that the Soviet

AT THE LAST meeting of the Securi-

Union would impose a veto only as a very last resort, because they would not want to prejudice thereby the prospects of a SALT agreement. But the Soviet Union may possibly be able to influence seven members of the Security Council to oppose or abstain on a vote for a renewal of the UNEF. In that case, the force would be abolished without the exercise of

Furthermore, Moscow has always maintained that the Secretary-General has no right to move emergency forces of the UN without the prior approval of the Security Council. This means that the Soviet Union would oppose the moving of UN forces on May 26, when Israel will have completed the first phase of withdrawal from Sinai. On this point, the Soviet Union is opposed in principle by the U.S. and Western powers, who favour granting such authority to the Secretary-Genera

THE ONLY substantial difference between the practice of settlement policy by the Likud government and that of the Alignment is the deception, the hypocrisy and the studied contempt for the settlers which permeates Likud policy. The Alignment openly preached giving up Samaria and most of Judea to the Arabs as part of a peace treaty — for pragmatic

'demography''). Therefore — (albeit with dublous logic — while they were chary of establishing a substantial Jewish presence in these areas, they openly countenanced and encouraged settlement in the Jordan Valley, which they proposed should be retained by Israel for security reasons.

In the Alignment's basic assumptions there is a glaring misunderstanding of the Arab attitude and purpose. There is not the slightest sign that the Arabs are interested in a "territorial compromise," whether tailored to an Israeli concept of security or not. The so-called moderates among them are prepared to agree to the process of eliminating Israel in three stages: the less moderate believe it can be achieved in two: and the least moderate of all cling, at least in principle, to the idea of an instant "final

These policies were, however, preached openly by the Alignment. Settlers in Samaria were not encouraged; they were discouraged. It was no secret long before the Likud came to power that Washington was opposed to Jewish settlement in the "occupied territories." This was a corollary of their fixed policy of pressing Israel to agree to withdraw (in accordance with Arab demands, though in defiance of any norm of justice or of international ethics) to the armistice lines of 1949.

The rationale was simple. Such a withdrawal was essential for peace; therefore settlement beyond those lines was an obstacle to peace. Period. This outlook, deriving from an acceptance of mythological Arab assumptions of their ownership of Palestine, is dangerous to Israel's future. Simply stated: opposition to settlement is a weapon in the Arab ciruggie against the Jewish presence in Palestine;
This outlook was not necessarily shared by public opinion in the U.S.; but the failure of the Alignment government to develop a rational and vigorous information policy helped Arab and pro-Arab propagandists to disseminate it effectively.

It was a crucial thesis of the Likud in opposition that such an information policy, sophisticated and sustained, would unquestionably succeed in fortifying and extending support for Israel. It would create a strong "security belt" within American public opinion in favour of Israel's essential policy, including her right and need to settle the available areas of Western Palestine.

While Washington consistently criticized the Alignment government for establishing settlements, it never made this a cardinal issue. Despite the intensified hostile public campaign after the Likud came to power, the Carter Administration did not present the settlement question as a casus belli.

FOREIGN MINISTER Dayan, however, far from seeking ways of stating and strengthening Israel's case on an issue crucial to her future, saw in the settlement question an opportunity to "improve relations" with Washington by knuckling under, by making a mindless concession. Precisely at that point, the Americans were informed (without any "provocation" on their part) that Israel would modify her settlements policy — by herding the settlers into army. camps. They could, and would, be regarded as soldiers. Israel would thus bring her policy into conformity with the abourd, insulting and dangerous American doctrine that civilian settlements were "illegal" under the Fourth Geneva Convention. This stroke of genius was, of course, performed with the approval of the prime

To the startled Americans, the announcement came as a breakthrough of tremendous, maybe historic, significance. Suddenly, without warning, the reputedly tough prime minister, in one drastic step, reneged on one of his central policies, voluntarily offering a limitation of settlement that went far beyond any restraints of the timid

THIS TRAVESTY was actually implemented in some of the settlements subsequently established (though it is only a fable that the settlers were issued with khaki dispers for their infants). LOVERS

. . for grown-ups and children is what most families want but seldom find. The Jerusalem Hilton has a new family plan created with babies, young children, and relaxation-seeking parents in mind. Our junior set consultants have assured us that we have thought of everything: pool, playground, tennis instruction, walking tours of Jerusalem, game room, movies, a special children's menu featuring hamburgers and french fries. Besides a summer camp, nursery school, and available babysitters, we also have diapers, baby food, and free laundry service for children under 7.

We leave grown-ups free for their own vacation, to become acquainted with the history and charm of Jerusalem. And when the sun sets, come back to the hotel: play tennis under lights, browse through a shopping arcade, or dine like royalty in a variety of gourmet restaurants.

The Jerusalem Hilton family plan will make you wish all your vacations could be separate but together.

For reservations and additional information, contact your travel agent or Hilton Reservation Service, or Jerusalem Hilton. Tel. 02-536151, ext. 3345.

Western countries agree to fund to regulate prices

BRUSSELS (AP). - Nine western countries agreed yesterday to propose a $750m. fund to regulate prices of 18 basic products at the UN Conference on Trade and Develop-ment (UNCTAD) next month in Austria, Belgium, Canada, Den-mark, Finland, Holland, Ireland, Morway and Sweden met here for two days at the invitation of Belgium and agreed on the proposal, to be funded by $470m. in compulsory con-reach agreement on the proposal last year over opposition by the U.S. and West Germany. Developing countries had asked for $10b. Among the products covered tea, coffee, wool, rubber and copper. Under the proposal, western countries will account for 68 per cent of compulsory contributions to the fund, eastern countries 17 per cent, developing countries 10 per cent and

per cent of the western contribution,

Belgian Minister for Development Marc Eyskens said on Wednesday that western nations benefited the most from trade with developing Eyskens pointed out that the U.S. and West Germany were the biggest importers from developing countries but also the biggest exporters to these countries.

Ramat Gan diamond centre will be world's largest

TEL AVIV. - Intensive effort is being expanded to complete work on the new Diamond Exchange Building in Ramat Gan. With the opening of the new building, slated for June 12, it will make the local exchange the undisputed largest diamond centre in the world. Moshe Schnitzer, president of the Israel Diamond Exchange, has just returned from a European trip dur-ing which he invited the heads of the syndicate as well as those of the various diamond bourses to attend the festive opening. He also related that major diamond buyers, from various parts of the world, have already accepted invitations to be present at the opening. The new building is 28 stories high and has been built by a group of foreign investors. It is reported to have the most up-to-date surveillance equipment in the world. Overseas diamantaires as well as members of the local diamond exchange have purchased space in the building. Schnitzer said that the reason for the festive opening is connected with the desire of the local industry to show that it is a strong and vital factor on the international diamond scene. A week prior to the planned opening the Belgian diamond bourse will be celebrating its 75th anniversary in the presence of the Belgian king and ministers. It is hoped that many of those attending the event

Schnitzer conceded that the diamond industry worldwide is currently suffering from a major recession. He conceded that five bankruptcles had taken place last week. "Four thousand employees have lost their jobs, in the recent past," Schnitzer told The Jerusalem Post.

He expressed confidence that the local industry will overcome the present difficulties. However, he did not anticipate major turnaround in demand until September of this year at which time purchases are made for the Christmas season.

From another source in the industry it has been pointed out that the cost of diamond roughs currently exceeds the sales price of the polish-

The industry has recently come under attack as allegations have been made against it that it is a focal point for black capital. The allegations have been refuted by the heads of the Israeli diamond in-dustry but the fact remains that until the current new fiscal year diamantaires have not been obliged to keep books of account.

This is the considered opinion of Liberal MK Avraham Katz, now in his 10th year as a legislator. The proposal vetoed by Yeshayahu was tabled jointly by himself and Labour's Mordechal Ben-Porat.

That was just one demonstration of

The guardian of justice

THE HIGH COURT of Justice has again provided evidence of its irreplaceable role as protector not only of Israel's civil rights but of its civic virtue and self respect.

In replying to a High Court order, the State Attorney, speaking for the Prime Minister, felt constrained to promise new legislation within four months to implement the moribund law calling for alternative national service for young women exempted from military service on religious grounds. The Court ruled that if this legislation is not passed within the time promised by the Prime Minister it will require the government to implement the existing law.

It is hoped that as a stickler for the procedures of constitutional democracy the Prime Minister will apply himself with vigour to implementation of his undertaking and thus wipe out the blemish of 25 years in which Israeli governments failed to apply the law.

The original decision to permit the national service law to remain a dead letter was Mr. Ben-Gurion's, acting in concert with Agudat Yisrael. This legacy was passed down to Levi Eshkol, Golda Meir, Yitzhak Rabin and now to Mr. Begin.

Mr. Begin's treatment of this sorry heritage was to make common cause with Agudat Yisrael in order to permit girls to opt out of military service with impunity. This was done in complete disregard of the fact that more than half of the country's young women are exempt from service for one reason or another while the remainder serve two years. Mr. Begin now has an opportunity to change course. To be sure, Agudat Yisrael will continue to object but the key to the situation is in the hands of the National Religious Party, many of whose members have always been discomfitted by their party's slavish subservience to the Aguda on this issue. It must be reiterated that the issue is not dragooning ultra-Orthodox young women who have been sheltered all their lives into military or alternative national service. No one has ever objected to freeing this tiny minority of young women from all

The objection has been to officially sanctioned and abetted lying that has enabled thousands of young women who do not come from such sheltered backgrounds to pursue their personal lives in the workplace, the university, and the cafe while others devote their years to national service. Implementation of the national service law, if carried out wholeheartedly and without resort to political subterfuge, could also prove of cardinal importance in reestablishing the guiding principle of Israeli society as one in which the individual citizen is called upon to give — and give as equally as possible — as well as to receive, from the nation.

Blocking terror

THERE ARE mounting signs that the PLO, in its frustration at the conclusion of the Israel-Egypt peace treaty, has determined to broaden its terrorist campaign from armed infiltration for the purpose of capturing Israeli, or Jewish, hostages to sheer and random mass murder.

The recent events at Brussels Airport and at Zar'it on the northern border would seem to provide evidence of such intent. The success of Israeli security forces, whether the guards at Brussels, the IDF on the northern frontier or the Border Police home, to scotch most of these attempts, is ice at worthy of appreciation. Given the intensified frustration and rage of the PLO it is essential that all Israelis — who are the potential targets of this rage - show extreme alertness to the terrorist attempts that are certain to continue.

The example given by 12-year-old Shalom Mellul of Jerusalem who discovered a bomb on the No. 19 bus in Jerusalem on Tuesday and whose quick thinking enabled the bus driver to evacuate the bus scant minutes before it exploded is worthy of the highest praise. May the likes of him be multiplied in Israel.

A GLOOMY DOVE

Avraham Katz, Liberal MK and member of the WZO executive, expresses pessimism about the survival prospects of both the Ninth Knesset and the Zionist movement in an interview with The Post's Political Correspondent, MARK SEGAL.

fellow Liberals will vote with the government on this anti-social measure. I for one will not vote for it," he said, implying an intention to abstain, rather than actively help the opposition.

Katz is angry with Labour on this particular issue, accusing them of hypocrisy and double-dealing, because they made the first concession to the ultra-Orthodox on abortion in the last Knesset. As to the present discussion, the Liberal MK regards it as regressive as well as anti-social. He fully respects the motivation of religious women who oppose abortion, but points out that given Israeli conditions, the Aguda amendment would penalize poor women, who, although they aiready have large families living in very difficult circumstances, cannot afford to pay for an abortion. Meanwhile, women who are better off would have no problem because they could resort to private physicians.

The coalition could well expect some internal shocks as negotiations proceed over the shape of the autonomy scheme, Katz predicted. At the moment no one knew what exactly would emerge.

"It depends on whether a partner for negotiations appears. If he does, then we are really in for internal political trouble. Given the present political set-up, any concession in Judea and Samaria means disruption at home.

He was referring to the hard-line stand of the National Religious Party and a section of the Likud. On the other hand, he took pains to stress, the coalition parties contain elements that do not reject functional or territorial compromise to the east in exchange for real peace. But, he emphasized, "as a dove, I say that without true and lasting peace, there is no way any of us would agree to budge from the River Jordan line."

Given NRP and Herut hard-liners, Katz expects a fairly hot political summer for Israel. His forecast is that the Carter Administration will try to pressure Israel into accepting its Brookings Plan blueprint for the West Bank and "a Palestine

many, but was nevertheless a

He entered politics after years as leader of the independent Secondary Schoolteachers' Union, which he helped organize outside the Histadrut. He prefers not to talk about the union; he is apparently disappointed at the path it has chosen, and mention of its fruitless strike up-in the Liberals' Jerusalem branch, alongside Minister-without-Portfolio Moshe Nissim. To judge by his implied criticism of the stewardship of the country's domestic affairs by the Liberal ministers, Katz is definitely not interested in currying favour with any of the established party bosses and their factions.

Questioned on the way things are going in the Likud and inside his own party, he says unequivocally: "If the leadership of the Likud, and particularly of the Liberals, does not act as a team, working in harness, we will pay a heavy price. If we do not pay more attention to internal af-fairs, if we fail to devote more thought, .more energy and more resources to such matters as housing, education, inflation and the country's social inequalities, all I say is we will pay a heavy price when the time comes."

If that sounds like an election manifesto, it is probably because Katz is running with Nissim on a nationwide list for the forthcoming Liberal Party national convention when together they will contest the party leadership. Though their power base is Jerusalem, they are certain to obtain support in other. branches and possibly profit from the bitter war being waged between such contenders for the top jobs as Industry, Trade and Tourism Minister Gideon Patt and Energy and Communications Minister

MUCH OF KATZ'S time is presently devoted to the World Zionist Organization, whose executive he joined last year at Chairman Arye Dulzin's bidding, and where he has taken over the Youth and Hehalutz department. He is one of the few Israeli politicians with a future who has decided to plunge himself into Zionist affairs, opting for the Agency post rather than the proffered chairmanship of his party's Knesset caucus and a number of Knesset committees.

He said that when he was asked to give his final decision, he approached each of his 14 fellow Liberal MKs individually, asking them whether he should resign from the House or hold his MK's seat as well as a full-time job on the Agencv/WZO Executive. They all insisted on his remaining in the House. (Apparently they feared that if he stepped down, it would make way for the entry into the Knesset of Land of Israel firebrand Zvi Shiloah on the
